Teddy Hug: answer

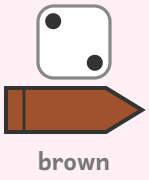

Look at the dots in each space. Find the same dots in the key and color the space with that crayon. Tiny spaces with no code: color them any way you like!

Key

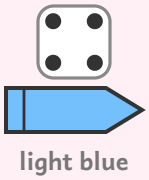

green

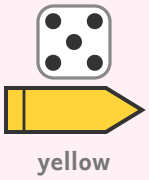

brown

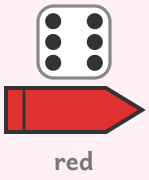

pink

light blue

💡 For grown-ups: why it works. Dots in dice patterns teach children to see how many without counting one by one (called subitizing), the base for adding later. Matching each space to the key is careful looking, and big spaces build hand control. Next step: color by number.
